Cabinet front featuring a central radwani mafruka design, articulated around a hexagon with a pseudo-star pattern radiating towards the edges.This decorated panel conceals a storage compartment fitted with an early hinge mechanism employing a simple loop wire, a long-established and effective solution in wooden furniture. The panel is surmounted by a khawranq composed of a pair of open ogee arches with delicate floral bouquets painted across the spandrels. Traces of paint on the remaining surfaces indicate that the entire piece was once ornamented with simple floral motifs. The decorative vocabulary and construction techniques suggest a date in the late Mamluk or Ottoman periods.
