Inv. no. 621/1-2

Two large wooden panels of unknown provenance, decorated with an expansive pattern of interlacing vine scrolls, punctuated by leaves and overlapping with a bold thuluth inscription. The scale of the panels and the monumentality of their designs suggest they were originally part of a large architectural fixture. Remnants of gilding hint at their once-vibrant appearance; the use of gold, often paired with a contrasting dark blue, was a common feature in the monumental inscriptions of medieval Cairo. The prominence of thuluth script and dense vegetal composition may further suggest a Mamluk-period date.
