Door leaf combining Mamluk and Khedival neo- Mamluk elements. The central panel, likely of Mamluk origin, is distinguished by its refined craftsmanship and decorative vocabulary. It was later repurposed and set into a Khedival-era frame, as indicated by the uneven joinery connecting the two elements. The overall configuration of the panel bears resemblance to the woodwork of the al-Rifa'i mosque (1912), while the flanking narrow rectangular panels are decorated with reciprocal arches and vegetal scrolls reminiscent of the design on the uppermost panel of the reverse of Sayyida Ruqayya's portable mihrab

(549-555 AH / 1154-60 CE). The craftsman carefully integrated motifs, compositional strategies, and salvaged elements from earlier works into a single composition, producing a piece appropriate to the taste of its donor, Prince Youssef Kamal.
